✂️ Rod of Iron Scroll — Wave I (1–100): Judgment

1. The rod of iron shatters the vessels of pride, yet steadies the humble until they eat of the tree of life.
2. The nations are dashed like brittle clay beneath the rod, yet those who cling to it cannot be consumed by the adversary's darts.
3. The rod reproves the oppressor and lifts the meek, for sealed words rise from the dust as living judgment in their appointed day.
4. The wicked rage like broken waves, but the rod of iron strikes them into foam, while the faithful drink from the living fountain.
5. Kings exalt their thrones in vanity, but the rod breaks their crowns as pottery, and sets the lowly upon Zion's hill.
6. The rod of iron burns like a furnace against lying lips, yet is cool water for those who walk in covenant.
7. Though Babylon engraves her laws in gold, the rod inscribes justice with fire upon her ruins.

8. False prophets speak swelling words, but the rod of iron rends their tongues, while sealing truth in the hearts of the remnant.
9. Merchants weigh deceitful balances, but the rod splits their scales, leaving only the just weight of YHWH.
10. The armies of the earth lift their banners, but the rod of iron snaps their spears and gathers Zion under one ensign.

11. As Pharaoh's chariots sank beneath the sea, so Babylon's engines sink beneath the rod's decree.
12. The proud build towers unto heaven, but the rod scatters their speech and binds the meek in one tongue of praise.
13. The rod of iron tears the mask from the great whore, exposing her fornication before all nations.
14. Drunk with the blood of saints, she staggers; the rod dashes her chalice, and her filth is poured out upon her head.
15. Princes decree oppression in darkness, but the rod of iron carves light into their courts, and their secrets flee as dust.
16. The rod is a storm against nations that exalt themselves, yet a pillar of fire for those who walk the covenant path.
17. Babylon sets her merchants as gods, but the rod breaks their idols and restores the poor to bread.
18. The rod of iron severs chains of captivity, even as it binds the rebellious in their own nets.
19. The proud say, "We cannot fall," but the rod splits their foundation, and Zion rises upon the ruins.
20. The rod thunders in the heavens, lightning upon the cedars, but whispers as a guide to the contrite in spirit.

21. As Assyria fell by the blast of YHWH's lips, so the rod of iron smites every tyrant with breath alone.
22. The rod pierces Leviathan, cutting the twisting serpent, while the remnant walk unbitten upon the path of life.
23. Babylon sits as a queen, but the rod casts her crown into the mire, clothing her with shame.
24. Her harlots sing in the streets, but the rod silences their lyres, and the song of Zion fills the earth.
25. The rod of iron bruises the head of the oppressor, while lifting the heel of the broken.
26. Nations boast of their walls, but the rod makes them rubble, and plants vineyards in their stead.
27. Armies boast of their iron, but the rod of YHWH is a greater iron that dashes their swords to dust.
28. The rod grinds idols into powder, yet engraves covenant upon the hearts of the meek.
29. Babylon cries, "I sit as eternal," but the rod answers, "Your throne is but clay."
30. As Egypt was judged by plagues, so the rod brings plagues upon the merchants of the last days.

31. The rod of iron is a flood against corruption, sweeping cities like driftwood, yet leaving Zion as an ark upon the waters.
 32. The proud laugh, but the rod laughs last, for it turns their laughter into mourning.
 33. With one stroke the rod of iron breaks ten thousand lies, and with one whisper restores a single soul.
 34. Babylon carves her name on mountains, but the rod engraves YHWH's name upon eternity.
 35. The rod bends not, though nations press against it; it stands as the axis of heaven and earth.
 36. Priests of vanity burn incense to idols, but the rod snuffs their altars with one wind.
 37. The rod is a net for the wicked, catching their feet in snares they set for others.
 38. Like Goliath struck by a stone, so the rod fells giants, lifting shepherd boys to kingship.
 39. The rod cuts the cords of false alliances, scattering those who conspire against Zion.
 40. As iron sharpens iron, the rod sharpens the remnant, fitting them as weapons of righteousness.
41. Babylon calls herself mother of nations, but the rod exposes her as barren, her womb filled with dust.
 42. Her kings drink blood from golden cups, but the rod spills them into the streets.
 43. The rod of iron tramples vineyards of violence, yet waters Zion's fig tree to fruit.
 44. Sorcerers enchant with lies, but the rod cleaves their spells as morning light on mist.
 45. The rod of iron beats the dust into whirlwind, driving the wicked as stubble before the flame.
 46. Zion trembles at first strike, but the rod steadies her feet on eternal rock.
 47. The rod turns the boasting of nations into silence, yet raises songs of covenant in the wilderness.
 48. The whore's merchants fall in one hour, for the rod has decreed her end.
 49. Babylon builds ships of trade, but the rod smashes them upon hidden reefs.
 50. Her gold is cankered, her silver rusted; the rod declares their glitter dung before YHWH.
 51. The rod of iron smites the altars of false gods, scattering their ashes upon the wind.
 52. Babylon's towers scrape the clouds, but the rod of YHWH pulls them down to dust.
 53. Her princes sit in velvet halls, but the rod strikes them naked before judgment.
 54. The rod of iron severs the cords of wicked contracts, freeing the poor from usury.
 55. Mighty men boast in their strength, but the rod crushes them as pottery shards.
 56. The rod of iron is a whirlwind that uproots nations, yet plants Zion as a cedar by rivers of water.
 57. Her judges sell righteousness for silver, but the rod weighs their souls and finds them wanting.
 58. Babylon adorns herself with scarlet, but the rod rends her garments into rags.
 59. The rod of iron turns the laughter of oppressors into wailing, their songs into silence.
 60. Her banners wave in arrogance, but the rod tears them to tatters in the storm.
61. The rod of iron scorches sorcerers who traffic in lies, yet clothes the faithful in garments of light.
 62. As fire devours stubble, so the rod consumes the haughty in a single breath.
 63. Her idols gleam with jewels, but the rod reveals them hollow and dead.

64. The rod of iron pierces the heart of liars, and plants truth in the mouths of children.
65. Her merchants hoard riches, but the rod scatters their treasures to the poor.
66. The rod of iron turns kings' thrones into ash-heaps, yet raises the meek to sit with princes.
67. As Sodom burned in her pride, so Babylon smolders beneath the rod's decree.
68. The rod of iron shakes the nations like figs from a tree, casting the ripe and the rotten together.
69. Her armies boast of their chariots, but the rod melts their wheels in fire.
70. The rod of iron thunders over waters, splitting seas for the covenant people.

71. Babylon fills her cup with abominations, but the rod dashes it upon her head.
72. The rod of iron crushes oppressors like grapes, yet presses wine of gladness for Zion.
73. Her prophets prophesy for hire, but the rod silences their mouths with dust.
74. As Jericho's walls fell flat, so the rod brings down fortresses of deceit.
75. The rod of iron scatters shepherds who feed themselves, but gathers lambs to the fold.
76. Her sorrows come in one day, for the rod decrees famine, fire, and plague.
77. The rod of iron bends not before kings, nor trembles before armies.
78. As thunder splits the heavens, so the rod rends false covenants in two.
79. Her treasures are cast to the streets, for the rod declares them filth.
80. The rod of iron blots out the names of tyrants, yet engraves Zion in eternal remembrance.

81. Babylon feasts in drunken revelry, but the rod overturns her tables as dung before the wind.
82. The rod of iron breaks the bows of hunters, sparing the prey of the poor.
83. Her priests bow to Mammon, but the rod sweeps their altars into the sea.
84. As a lion tears prey, so the rod rends oppressors limb from limb.
85. The rod of iron smites the gates of brass, opening a way for the remnant.
86. Her rulers plot in secret, but the rod exposes their schemes to the light.
87. The rod of iron shakes Babylon's foundations, leaving her towers in rubble.
88. As hailstones fell on Egypt, so the rod rains fire upon her fields.
89. The rod of iron crushes idols of gold, leaving only the Rock of Ages.
90. Her nobles clothe themselves in silk, but the rod wraps them in sackcloth.

91. The rod of iron splits rivers, leading Zion dry-shod across.
92. Her strongholds quake at the rod's touch, crumbling as clay.
93. The rod of iron pierces through deceit, laying bare every hidden thing.
94. Her harlots wail in the streets, for the rod has ended their hire.
95. The rod of iron uproots wicked nations like thorns, casting them into the fire.
96. Her princes boast of tomorrow, but the rod decrees their end today.
97. The rod of iron is a storm against tyrants, but a shelter to the meek.
98. As Nineveh fell in her wickedness, so the rod lays Babylon waste.
99. The rod of iron strikes chains from captives, but binds rebels in fetters unbreakable.
100. Her name is carved in smoke, but the rod engraves Zion forever in stone.

🔪 Verses 101–200

101. The rod of iron is a lamp unto the feet of the righteous, guiding them through the valley of shadow.

102. As Israel followed the pillar of fire by night, so the rod directs the faithful to the promised land.

103. Those who grasp the rod walk in straight paths, while wanderers fall into mists of darkness.

104. The rod of iron stretches across the gulf, a bridge from captivity to freedom.

105. As manna fed the wilderness, so the rod feeds the soul with words of life.

106. The rod of iron is the shepherd’s staff, steering lambs from cliffs and wolves.

107. Zion’s children cling to the rod, and their garments remain unspotted from the world.

108. The rod steadies trembling hands, that they faint not in the hour of trial.

109. The meek walk securely, for the rod marks their steps as on a sure foundation.

110. As Noah’s ark guided through flood, so the rod carries the remnant above waters of destruction.

111. The rod of iron whispers wisdom to the simple, yet confounds the wisdom of the wise.
112. Those who grasp it walk toward the tree whose fruit is sweet above all that is sweet.
113. The rod reveals hidden springs in deserts, that the weary may drink and rise again.
114. It leads past serpents that hiss from the dust, unharmed are those who hold it fast.
115. As a compass points north, so the rod directs Zion to the mountain of YHWH.
116. The rod turns stumbling stones into stepping stones, leading the faithful upward.
117. Though storms roar, the rod anchors the soul in calm assurance.
118. The rod guides feet away from snares, toward paths of deliverance.
119. Those who despise the rod wander into strange roads, but those who love it enter the gates of Zion.
120. The rod of iron is the shepherd's call, gathering scattered sheep into one fold.

121. The rod is a ladder reaching heavenward, each rung a word of Christ.
122. The weary lean upon it, and their strength is renewed.
123. It marks the way through wilderness thick with briars, carving a path for the humble.
124. As Ruth clung to Naomi, so the remnant cleaves to the rod and finds their Redeemer.
125. The rod of iron shines as dawn, scattering the darkness of unbelief.
126. It guides the blind to rivers of truth, opening eyes long shut.
127. Those who grasp it are lifted above temptation's flood, untouched by fiery darts.
